

This type of legislation and laissez faire economic policy smacks of greed and corporate corruption in its highest form. There are almost no arguments in favor of moving toward a completely corporate media infrastructure that are not greed or controll biased. At least I have not seen them. It is time to put a stop to what has become an obvious pandering to the corruption that made this country great, and begin moving to a better media (which in its current form is already deplorable). We wish to have our media content come with a choice covering all spectrums, so that we might remain objective and trusting of our government agencies and their policies toward the content we receive. Please do not take steps toward totalitarianism in the form of corporate/government controlled media. The role of the FCC is to protect the consumer, not the corporate machine in the role of reactionary politics to protect an industry slow to change. Change is good for the consumer and the public mental health. Force the corporate media giants to protect their own interests and find a better way to compete and deliver relivant content to earn their money. Let the consumer decide.
